COURSE SUMMARY

Labor is a broad topic that can be approached from a variety of perspectives. This course is designed to familiarize students with some of the key traditional perspectives, and to give students an opportunity to apply these perspectives to contemporary issues in Labor Studies. Students will be asked to read the assigned scholarship for the arguments, to take a position on those arguments, and to scrutinize the arguments’ logic and relationship to the evidence. Students will also be required to participate in discussions and give presentations. Some of the readings are difficult. And, students who enroll in the course must be labor studies majors or minors, and must have earned 15 or more credits in labor studies. A student who does not meet these requirements must seek permission from the instructor in order to take this class.

GRADING AND CLASS ASSIGNMENTS

Attendance and Weekly Entries (20%) (120 Points)

a. Rutgers University has an attendance policy:

Students are expected to attend all scheduled course meetings, although no special provisions are normally made for reporting occasional absences from class. It is the policy of the university to excuse without penalty students who are absent because of religious observance and to allow the makeup of work missed because of such absences. A student absent from an examination because of required religious observance will be given an opportunity to make up the examination without penalty. We will abide by this attendance policy.

b. Weekly Entries

All students who are not assigned to facilitate must submit a weekly entry, which should be posted on Sakai at the “Assignments” site. The weekly entry must be posted 10 minutes prior to each class. The entry must respond to each reading assigned for the week. For example, if there are three readings assigned then there must be three responses. A response should be no more than five sentences long and should summarize the main points or themes of each assigned reading.
