Introduction

- The rapid development and expansion of labor market data tools for examining labor market trends changes how higher education institutions approach their understanding of the labor market and inform what they do.
- Labor market information (LMI) offers postsecondary institutions (PSIs) easy access to data that can be used in myriad ways, including:
  - adapt programs and credentials to stakeholder needs,
  - create opportunities for institutional leaders to make better decisions about program demand and viability,
  - staffing and other resource needs, and
  - employer and community partnerships.
