Course Overview:

This course plays a central role in the labor studies and employment relations major as the only required advanced class. It engages students in both critically analyzing the main theoretical propositions of the field and covering the field's constitutive intellectual traditions, historical trajectories, and its cutting-edge literature.

In line with the title of the course, the field draws from a variety of perspectives, ranging from classics on political economy to the modern social sciences, such as sociology, political science, and economics. This course examines how the field of labor studies and employment relations brings these different lines of inquiry together around a set of core thematic concerns, analytical commitments, and normative convictions. Class discussions interrogate social theories in their historical contexts and evaluate their impact, revealing them as central drivers of how the world of work is ultimately theorized and governed.

As students in this class examine some of the big questions of the field, they will gain increased proficiency in important skills: reading for analytical insight, debating ideas, and communicating with others. From the theoretical to the practical, students should be able to use what they learn in this class for whatever their next steps might be, including making valuable contributions across workplaces, leading change in society, and pursuing further academic study.

Learning Objectives: The student is able to...

School of Management and Labor Relations

- Demonstrate an understanding of relevant theories and apply them given the background context of a particular work situation. (Goal IV)

Department of Labor Studies and Employment Relations

- Demonstrate an understanding of the perspectives, theories, and concepts in the field of labor and employment relations. (Goal 1)

Additional course objectives from the instructors

- Identify core concepts of the field of labor studies & employment relations.
- Apply those concepts to understanding contemporary developments in work.
- Synthesize information from multiple sources to generate new insights.

How will you learn in this online course?

Most weeks you will:

- Review text, PowerPoint slides, and videos provided by the instructor(s) on the page in the online shell. These are like lectures but much shorter.
- Read, view, and listen to theorists and analyses offering a variety of perspectives. There will be an emphasis on reading, but in many weeks you will also have the opportunity to review a video or videos, or listen to an audio file.
- Participate in threaded discussions with other students, posting at least 3 times a week. Alternatively, you might be asked to complete a writing assignment, group project, quiz, or exam.
- Read a weekly message from the professor (posted in Announcements).

Evaluation:

Grading Component	Points	Percent of Total Grade
Introductions (week 1)	50	5%
Discussion Forums (7 out of 9 discussion forums in weeks 2, 3, 4, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14) - 50 points each	350	35%
Quiz (week 5)	50	5%
Podcast Forum (week 6)	50	5%
Midterm Exam (week 7)	250	25%
Final Exam (weeks 15/16)	250	25%
Total	1000	100%

Points have no “absolute meaning,” – in the end, the professor will use judgment in translating points into grades for the course. For example, typically a B+ is 87-89.9 points, but the professors may decide to use some other range of points.

Keep current – avoid being late!

This is an interactive class – you need to keep current in the reading and forums so that you can interact with others in the class. An online class is somewhat flexible to fit your schedule, but you are responsible for managing your time and for getting online each week.

You should inform the instructor of any serious personal emergencies that arise which prevent you from completing your work – for instance, hospitalization that makes it impossible to get online. A trip associated with your job is not such an emergency, nor is a problem with your personal computer. There are many ways to get online including in Rutgers' campus computing facilities.

Accommodations for students with disabilities:

Rutgers University welcomes and is prepared to accommodate students with disabilities into all its educational programs. To receive consideration for reasonable accommodations, a student with a disability must contact the appropriate disability services office at the campus where you are officially enrolled, participate in an intake interview, and provide documentation: <https://ods.rutgers.edu/students/documentation-guidelines>.

If the documentation supports your request for reasonable accommodations, your campus's disability services office will provide you with a Letter of Accommodations. Please share this letter with your instructor and discuss the accommodations required with them as early in your course as possible. To begin this process, please complete the Registration form on the ODS web site at: <https://ods.rutgers.edu/students/registration-form>.

Course Organization:

The course is set up in four units.

- Unit I: The Promise of Labor Studies & Employment Relations (weeks 1-2). This unit interrogates the “value proposition” of the field, clarifying core thematic concerns and central theoretical propositions.
- Unit II: Big Ideas about the Economy and Work (weeks 3-7). This unit tracks the development of thinking about the economy and work by exploring classic ideas and the historical contexts that gave rise to them.
- Unit III: Ideas and Institutions (weeks 8-10). This unit more closely explores the interplay between theorizing on employment relations and the governance of work.
- Unit IV: Labor (Studies) in Contemporary Society (weeks 11-15). This unit engages contemporary questions in labor studies to provide further depth to earlier discussions and encourage student to reflect on ways they might be able to leverage the lessons from the course in their respective lives.
